([redacted] Comment. Several stores in Asuncion were looted in the early morning of 26 October subsequent to the end of hostilities in the recently attempted coup d'etat. Some indications exist that the government may attribute this work to the Communists.) [redacted] that at the above hour only government troops, police, and a few civilians who fought on the side of the government could have been in that area of the town where the looting occurred. The pillage was done not by the Communists but by the above-mentioned government forces.)
